

Gathering Voices for EDI: A Student-Led Movement

Do you currently sit on an EDI (equity, diversity, inclusion) student committee or run a student group dedicated to inclusion in CS? Are you planning to join such a group? Do you want to start one at your institution? If the answer is yes to any of these questions, join us for a 45-minute "birds of a feather"-style discussion about the kinds of impact students can make (or want to see) at their institutions. In small groups, we will discuss what has worked, what hasn't worked, and what we want to do in the future. Whether it is encouraging community among students, driving real change in the department, or suggesting events that actually matter, we want to share our experiences and hear about yours!

This event is run by the Turing Society, an EDI committee and student group for CS graduate students at the University of Alberta.
